IF THE GOP NOMINATION IS CONTESTED, THESE DELEGATES COULD BECOME THE NATION'S...

KINGMAKERS

A group of unbound delegates from Pennsylvania could be the driving force in deciding the Republican party's nominee in the case of a contested convention. 2

HARRIET TUBMAN TO BE FEATURED ON U.S. $20 BILL: POLITICO

1 The U.S. Treasury has decided to replace former President Andrew Jackson with anti-slavery crusader Harriet Tubman on the U.S. $20 bill, and will put leaders of the women's suffrage movement on the back of $10 bill, Politico reported on Wednesday. The long-awaited decision keeps Alexander Hamilton, one of the U.S. founding fathers, on the front of the $10 bill, Politico said, citing unnamed sources. It said there would also be changes to the $5 bill to depict civil rights era leaders. REUTERS

MICHIGAN OFFICIALS CHARGED IN FLINT WATER CRISIS

2 Three Michigan state and local officials were criminally charged in connection with the state attorney general's investigation into dangerous lead levels in Flint's drinking water, a crisis that has fueled widespread public outrage. Genesee District Judge Tracy Collier-Nix authorized charges against Flint employee Michael Glasgow and Michigan Department of Environmental Quality employees Stephen Busch and Michael Prysby. Glasgow, 40, was charged with tampering with evidence and willful neglect of duty, according to court documents. The first charge is related to when he allegedly changed testing results to show there was less lead in city water than there actually was. REUTERS

EU HITS GOOGLE WITH SECOND ANTITRUST CHARGE

3 The European Union charged Google on Wednesday with using its dominant Android mobile operating system to squeeze out rivals, opening a second front against the U.S. technology giant that could result in large fines. EU antitrust regulators said that by requiring mobile phone manufacturers to pre-install Google Search and the Google Chrome browser to get access to other Google apps, the U.S. company was harming consumers by stifling competition. The European Commission said such practices, which started in 2011 when the company became dominant in mobile operating systems and app stores, showed Google was seeking to shield its search engine, the world's most popular, from competition. State's GOP delegates could be kingmakers

Pennsylvania's "unbound" Republican delegates are under increased scrutiny as rumors circulate that the party may have a "brokered" convention in Cleveland this July.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

"I have two guiding principles: last man standing and electability."

That's how Calvin Tucker, a Philadelphia candidate for Republican delegate, will weigh the Republican presidential candidates when he goes to cast a ballot at this summer's convention.

For months Republicans have debated whether Donald Trump, despite crushing GOP competitors in caucuses and primaries so far, can win in a general election. Meanwhile, Trump has criticized the delegate process as unfair while rumors swirl that delegates and the "GOP establishment" might try to block Trump from getting the 1,237 delegates needed to secure the nomination. So Pennsylvania's 54 unbound delegates could play a crucial role.

"The very nature of uncommitted and unbound gives you some room to have discussion," Tucker said. "Once you've bound yourself, then that's your candidate. So if that candidate fails to get the required majority vote, 1,237 on the first ballot, then you have to make a decision. Do I stay with that person on the second ballot?"

The real question may be, "Who is making the kingmakers?"

Individual delegates, who are considered federal candidates, are not required to register or report the funds they raise for personal delegate activity, according to the Federal Election Commission (FEC).

Delegates can't receive donations from corporations, labor organizations, foreign nationals or federal government contractors. If they had a political action committee, they could raise unlimited funds, but would need to file FEC reports if they received more than $1,000.

"The campaigns have been reaching out," Tucker acknowledged. "The Donald Trump campaign has been very aggressive in their reaching out and having a discussion with me, and I told them exactly what I told you."

> "It's imperative to ask people, what happens after the first ballot?"
> Casper

But that doesn't mean campaigns have been giving delegates bags of cash.

"I haven't been aware of any monetary stuff going on," said Aldridk Gessa-Lang, a Philly Republican delegate who said she plans to vote for Ted Cruz at the convention regardless of how the district votes. "I don't know what everybody else is doing. I don't know if anyone is getting offered trips to Vegas or private jets, but it's not me."

Lauren Casper, a delegate candidate from the 13th District, said she hasn't received any donations or gifts from the campaigns either.

Casper said she personally supports Trump, but will vote for the candidate her district votes for — and questioned the honesty of any delegate who doesn't share their political preferences.

"It's really dishonest for my opponents to say that they're representing the 13th Congressional District, but not say who they're personally supporting," she said. "A lot of people are coming out and saying they'll represent their district only on the first ballot. It's imperative to ask people, what happens after the first ballot? And what happens after the second ballot?"

All Pennsylvania delegates were unbound in previous elections, but the party changed its rules last September.

With Trump's rise creating what some have described as a full-fledged insurrection with the GOP, delegates have never before been so scrutinized.

"I've been involved now in five conventions. This year is the first time I've fielded any questions about our delegates," said Philly GOP executive director Joe DeFelice. "This is uncharted territory for all of us. I think that's why voters need to read up on who their delegate candidates are."

Philly preps for primaries with info for voters

The DA and Committee of Seventy CEO informed voters about everything they need to know before Tuesday's primary races.

JENNY DEHUFF
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

District Attorney Seth Williams and Committee of Seventy CEO David Thornburgh warned Philadelphians Wednesday of what to do should they encounter any sort of election fraud on primary day next Tuesday.

For two decades now, the good-government group Committee of Seventy has partnered with the DA's office on election issues, especially when it comes to alerting Pennsylvanians' of who their elected officials are, who's in the running and where to go to vote.

Williams said Wednesday during a news conference that his Election Fraud Task Force would be out in full force on April 26 and anyone having any trouble casting their vote should call 215-686-9641/9643/9644 if they experience any difficulty.

"It is always busy at the polls on presidential primary day, so voters should make sure they check their registration and know the location of their polling place before they head out to vote," said Williams.

"And, as always, if someone sees a violation or experiences any difficulty in casting their ballot, they should reach out to the Election Fraud Task Force so we can protect each Philadelphian's right to vote — and we do protect the city's voting processes. For example, last year we charged nine people with various voting violations."

Williams said the Election Fraud Task Force is comprised of more than 60 assistant district attorneys and several dozen detectives who watch out for illegal voting, candidate write-in issues, refusals of election boards to recognize poll watcher certificates and illegal electioneering.

Don't be surprised if you see some high school students at polling places, either. Thornburgh said his team is deploying more than 400 high school student "election ambassadors" to help answer voters' questions as well as to encourage voters to fill out an online survey to share and document their experiences at the polls.

"Voters should make sure they check their registration and know the location of their polling place before they head out to vote."
Williams

"Also, if you see something, say something — something out of bounds, some intimidation, some potentially illegal activity," said Thornburgh.

"The first thing is to say something to the election board. That's what they're there to do. There are over 5,000 men and women who serve on election boards throughout the city and that's really the first line of defense."

Veterans get noble treatment at fifth annual vet's resource fair

Philadelphia held its 5th annual Veterans Resource Fair. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Philadelphia's veterans, both the homeless and fully employed, were front and center for the fifth annual City Council Veterans Resource Fair on the Thomas Paine Plaza outside the Municipal Services Building.

The sun was shining bright as City Council members and more than 60 veterans groups, health care, continuing education, career and other service providers dedicated to assisting veterans joined together to offer services and support.

Roughly 200 vets showed up, many donning their old or current service uniforms and waving American flags.

"I remember, at one point in time, pretty much all the city did was make sure that people got flags for Memorial Day and Veterans Day, remember that? That was ridiculous!" said City Council President Darrell Clarke.

"I want to say that while those days are particularly important to all the many veterans and all the people of this country, it's more important to make sure that our wonderful veterans have opportunity, service and people making sure that their lives are respected based on what they have done for their country every day of the week."

George Ginder, who lives in Philly's Fairmount section and fought in Vietnam, said this year's vet's fair was bigger and better than years past. He served in the military from 1967 to 1993.

"I thought it was a great day for veterans," he said. "Everybody comes together with their resources to make everything available for the veterans. It's like one-stop shopping."

"Events like this one are tremendously important elements of who we are as a nation."

Lord

Ginder said, this year, there were more people attending and more exhibitors.

"Naturally, then, it puts the veterans in good spirits. The entertainment was great, too."

Live music was provided by Jerry Blavat aka "the Geator with the Heater," the Mummers Woodland String Band, Frankie Darcell from WDAS-FM radio and others.

Major General Walter T. Lord, a military executive and member of the Reserve Forces Policy Board within the Office of the Secretary of Defense, served as the day's keynote speaker.

"Events like this one are tremendously important elements of who we are as a nation," he said.

"Warriors join our armed forces for a wide variety of reasons, but the support we receive from our fellow citizens surely makes that duty much easier. … The theme of 'always remember' is today's because this city has always remembered her veterans, her sons and daughters who have gone off to serve our country. We in uniform have learned — and we've learned as a nation — the profound impact our citizens make in supporting her warriors and veterans. It's gratifying to know that the city of Philadelphia continues to recognize those sacrifices and I'm both honored and proud to thank you on their behalf for that recognition." JENNY DEHUFF

Pizza Brain founder goes public with weed treatment for young son's cancer

Brian Dwyer is seeking to crowdfund a documentary about the treatment.

@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

The founder of one of Philly's hippest businesses is going public with his decision to use a controversial cannabis oil treatment for his young son's cancer.

Brian Dwyer, the founder of Fishtown's Pizza Brain, went public on April 20 — the marijuana enthusiast's holiday — with the fact that for the last year he has been helping his 2-year-old son Waldo fight a rare form of eye cancer with cannabis oil.

"Over the past two years, my journey has taken me all over the world of cannabis," Dwyer said. "Weed is not just something that people smoke to watch Netflix, eat Cheetos and pull their shades down. … It's sacred medicine. That's what it is. And I see it now."

Dwyer went public with the cannabis oil treatment for his son Waldo on his Facebook page and also announced that he is creating a documentary about his son's journey.

He has created a Gofundme campaign to cover production costs for the film — which as of Wednesday afternoon had surpassed its goal of $3,000 in less than 12 hours.

Waldo Dwyer, who just turned 2, was diagnosed at 6 months with bilateral retinoblastoma, a form of eye cancer.

Medical professionals prescribed chemotherapy and a variety of prescription drugs that made the baby sicker, then prescribed more drugs to combat their side effects, according to Dwyer.

After treating his son with cannabis oil, Waldo began breastfeeding, crawling, pooping and laughing again, according to Dwyer. They continued chemotherapy, but eventually stopped using traditional pharmaceuticals entirely. At this point, Waldo is tumor-free, although not technically fully cancer-free yet.

"[Modern medicine] is concerned with … making you better," he said, "but the road to getting better is full of just the worst stuff. They were trying to give my kid morphine."

But there's no scientific research supporting Dwyer's experience with cannabis oil, said Dr. Michael Dellavecchia, president of the Philadelphia County Medical Society.

"As a physician, as a citizen, I wish something that easy worked. I wish holy water worked," Dellavecchia said. "A 1-year-old baby can't tell you how he feels. This kid could have just been high as a kite and oblivious to what his symptoms are."

Dellavecchia cautioned that stories like Dwyer's might make other cancer patients consider unproven courses of treatment.

"Going with an unproven treatment with an undocumented substance where you can't guarantee purity, dosage, quantity, versus an approved, tried-and-true treatment that has been monitored and assessed by the scientific community, I definitely would go with the latter," he said.

Dwyer, who quit Pizza brain last year, is planning to soon move to Oregon so he can have guaranteed access to more oil for Waldo.

Dwyer, who previously hadn't shared the treatment method with Waldo's doctors, said he is unsure of the consequences of going public.

"I think this story is helping people," he said, "and I want to help people if I can do that."

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

NY wins give Trump and Clinton an eye to election

If Trup and Clinton do go on to secure their respective parties' nomination, opinion polls show Clinton with a sizeable lead.

Donald Trump

Hillary Clinton GETTY IMAGES

Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton began setting their sights on November's general election on Wednesday, with a new poll showing Clinton would handily win such a matchup.

Trump's crushing defeat of Ted Cruz in Tuesday's party nominating contests in New York tilted the energy in the Republican race back to the frontrunner. Clinton's win over Bernie Sanders, while narrower, broke a string of victories by the democratic socialist and gave her a much-needed lift.

Trump's win marked a rebound from his Wisconsin defeat two weeks ago and set him up for another big night on April 26, when Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Delaware and Maryland will hold primaries.

"Ted Cruz is mathematically out of winning the race," Trump said Wednesday on Twitter. "Now all he can do is be a spoiler, never a nice thing to do. I will beat Hillary!" Trump, 69, predicted some "amazing weeks" ahead for his campaign.

Cruz, a senator from Texas, dismissed his rival's victory in New York as a predictable win.

"Upon winning his home state, Donald, with a characteristic display of humility, declared this race is over," he said during a Pennsylvania campaign stop.

Cruz, who has argued that Trump would lose the election for Republicans, added with scathing irony: "Manhattan has spoken, and if the rest of the voters would quietly go home now and allow him to give the general election to Hillary, all would be better."

Trump, a former reality TV star, has adapted a more measured tone in recent days and appears to be trying to heal wounds inflicted by a campaign that has alarmed many in the Republican establishment. He sent campaign advisers to a Republican National Committee meeting in Hollywood, Florida, starting on Wednesday.

Trump's haul of most of New York's 95 delegates moved him closer to the 1,237 needed to win the nomination outright. REUTERS

Trump leans toward replacing Fed chief if he wins White House

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump would be inclined to replace Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen if he wins the White House despite supporting the U.S. central bank's efforts to keep interest rates low, he told Fortune magazine.

"I think she's done a serviceable job," Trump said in an interview published late on Tuesday, as the billionaire real estate mogul moved a step closer to becoming his party's nominee with a resounding win in the New York state nominating contest.

"I don't want to comment on reappointment, but I would be more inclined to put other people in."

Yellen was nominated for the top Fed job by Democratic President Barack Obama and began her four-year term in February 2014. REUTERS

At least eight dead in Houston-area floods; more rain forecast

At least eight people have died and some 1,150 homes have been damaged in flooding triggered by torrential downpours in the Houston area this week, officials said on Wednesday, as forecasts called for more rain.

Seven of those killed were found in vehicles that had been in flooded areas, the Harris County Institute of Forensic Sciences and a local sheriff said, adding that medical examiners were working to confirm the causes of death.

The National Weather Service said more rain is on tap for the city, the country's fourth largest, after a record-setting drenching that dumped as much as 18 inches on some parts of the Houston area on Monday.

The weather service has issued a flood watch from central Texas through Houston and into large parts of Louisiana.

There have been more than 1,200 water rescues during the recent flooding, with emergency crews shuttling people by boat to dry ground and picking up motorists whose cars were caught in rushing waters.

The Houston Independent School District, the country's seventh-largest school district, said it would reopen on Wednesday after the flooding caused hundreds of schools to close earlier this week.

Heavy storms can overwhelm the drainage channels that move water from Houston back to the Gulf of Mexico, particularly if the ground is already saturated.

The city faced similar widespread flooding during a storm last May and Tropical Storm Allison's torrent in 2001.

Beat the sleepaway camp blues

Overnight camp may require your child to leave her comfort zone. ISTOCK

A kid's first chance to have adventures away from Mom and Dad is exciting — until homesickness sets in.

GINA TOMAINE

Campfire songs, faded friendship bracelets and swimming in the lake — summer camp memories are the stuff of legends. It's no surprise little ones are anxiously awaiting their first time away from home. Despite their excitement, that initial separation from Mom and Dad can be tough on both parents and kids.

Local overnight camp experts gave us their best tips for coping with sleepaway camp blues:

Plan practice time away from home

Spend time away from home before camp, perhaps at a friend or grandparent's house. This is just as valuable for parents as it is for campers; parents are often more nervous about camp than their kids. – Tracy Power, director of Appel Farm Arts Camp

Do your homework together

Research the camp, communicate with camp staff and ask questions and involve the child in the decision-making and preparation process. By getting everyone on board, campers and camp parents should feel confident and happy about their choice. – Justin Lavner, Director of Lavner Camps

Live by your calendar

Make a calendar and mark the days you'll be at camp. Once kids see that camp won't last forever, it will be easy to make the most of their time there, and it gives anxious parents a countdown to look forward to. – Tracy Power

Be positive (even if you're nervous):

If a parent says in front of their child, "I'm not sure they can be away from home that long," or "Don't worry, if you are homesick I will come get you," then the child starts believing camp will be too hard for them. It is vital that parents talk positively about camp with their children, helping them to be excited rather than scared. – Tracy Power

Stick it out

Ninety-five percent of children report feeling homesick at camp. It's normal. There is nothing quite like the feeling of overcoming something you did not think you were capable of, and overcoming homesickness at camp does this for children. It builds confidence, coping skills and independence. – Tracy Power

Be flexible

We have had very homesick kids go home for a night and come back the next morning. One extreme case saw a child turn into a day camper. They did everything but sleep at camp. They came back the following year and were just fine. They just needed time. – Claudia Carlson, director of Young People's Theatre Workshop

Plan activities for you as a parent

Plan to be busy the first night of camp. Go on a date, have dinner with friends, do something to keep your mind active, not driving yourself crazy with worry. – Travis Simmons, Executive Director of Camp Dark Waters

Ban separation guilt

Camp will not always be smooth sailing. There will be times when your child is challenged, or gets their feelings hurt, but as researcher and writer Brene Brown says, "What makes children happy doesn't always prepare them to be courageous, engaged adults." Sending your child to camp is showing them love by allowing them the chance to dare greatly on their own. – Tracy Power

5 Sophisticated summer camps for city kids

Because canoes aren't for everyone.

MONICA WEYMOUTH
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

For some kids, spending a week hiking, canoeing and camping in the great outdoors is the definition of summer fun. But for those who have no interest in tents or bugs or bugs in tents? Here are five Philly camps they won't forget.

For the aspiring musician: Girls Rock Philly

If there were a badge for "Camp We Most Wish Existed When We Were Kids," Girls Rock Philly would earn it every year. Open to all girls ages 9 through 18, this week-long program features workshops on everything from songwriting to spinning to stage presence. The session concludes with a concert showcasing original work, which students will also have the opportunity to record. As for tuition, a generous sliding scale includes full scholarships, so if you have a little cash or time to spare, consider donating or volunteering. July 11-17 and July 18-24, girlsrockphilly.org

For the budding actor: Arden Theatre Summer Camp

With year-round kid-friendly programming, the Arden is dedicated to making the stage accessible for theatergoers of all ages. Taught by local theater professionals, the summer camps for students in grades 1 through 12 offer courses in acting, music, storytelling, improv, dance and design. Weeklong sessions offered June 27-Sept. 2, $290-$400, ardendramaschool.com

For the daredevil: The Philadelphia School of Circus Arts

Can't keep them from climbing up the walls during summer break? Let the talented faculty at the School of Circus Arts show your little Spider-Man or Wonder Woman how to take flight safely. Classes in trapeze, acrobatics, tight wire, juggling, plate spinning and more are offered by the day or by the week for kids ages 8 and up. Classes offered June 20-Sept. 2, prices vary, phillycircus.com

For the messy maker: The Clay Studio's Clay Camp

Old City gallery and workspace the Clay Studio offers an impressive roster of half-day and full-day classes for campers ages 6 and up. Sessions in everything from wheel throwing to Claymation to sculpture are complemented by visits to nearby galleries and historic sites, making for an educational, inspirational summer. Bonus points: Your kids get to make a mess — we're talking a huge, muddy, one-for-the-ages mess — and you don't have to clean it up. June 27-Aug. 25, prices vary, theclaystudio.org

For the storyteller: WHYY's Journalists and Filmmakers Camp

Designed for high schoolers, WHYY's award-winning summer camps provide hands-on experience for young storytellers. A two-week journalism session allows students to develop and produce their own pieces alongside WHYY staffers, while participants in the three-week filmmaking intensive will create their own short films. Although tuition is steep, students have access to professional media equipment, and scholarships are available. Journalism: June 27-July 9 and Aug. 8-19; Filmmaking: July 11-29, $1200-$1950, whyy.org

Is Liam Hemsworth lying about wedding plans?

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Last week Liam Hemsworth flat out denied all those rumors that he and reunited girlfriend Miley Cyrus' wedding plans are back on, telling an Australian magazine that he is definitely not engaged. And you'd think that he of all people would know. But an anonymous source in cahoots with Radar Online would beg to differ. "They are fully underway planning their upcoming wedding," the source breathlessly reports. Oh, and there are apparently details, so dig these: "Miley and Liam want to have a summer wedding and they plan to hold the celebration close to their homes in Malibu," the source says. "Miley's parents have already offered to pay for the nuptials." Well, that's awfully nice of them, hypothetically. "[Miley's mom] Tish really wants the two of them to get married so that they can start making grandkids for her." Oh. Oh, I see. You know, I'm starting to get an idea of who exactly this anonymous source might be.

Kelly Ripa not taking Michael Strahan's news very well

Earlier this week, Michael Strahan announced he's leaving "Live with Kelly and Michael" in September to become a co-anchor at "Good Morning America," and if that news caught you off-guard, imagine how Kelly Ripa feels. I mean, you'll have to imagine, since she flat-out didn't show up to work Wednesday, one day after the news broke. Sources tell TMZ Ripa is livid over not having any advance word about the move, and she spent Wednesday at home fuming and feeling humiliated. And really, can you blame her? She's the co-host whose been there longer — and whose name comes first in the title — so you couldn't give her at least a little advance notice before the press release comes out? That's cold, Strahan. That's cold.

Mariah Carey and the very specific costume party

Oh, Mariah Carey. Don't ever change. The eccentric diva threw an "intimate" party at her rented villa in Italy recently at which attendees were expected to abide by a very, very strict dress code: dress up as Mariah Carey. Both male and female attendees, even. Yup, Carey insisted on a whole room full of tributes to her various looks, and if anyone can pull off such a demand, it's Mariah. But Carey herself, never one to risk coming in second in a costume contest — even if she is, in fact, the real article — did not go as herself. Instead, she reintroduced her black-clad, stiletto-heeled alter ego, Bianca. Because of course she did. Again, ma'am, please, don't ever change.

Tina Fey tried to get an "Into the Woods" audition

Stars, they're just like us — aware of how desperate they look, but often too late. Tina Fey humbly admits that when she was between making "30 Rock" and "the Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt" and had some time on her hands, she tried stretching herself a bit — namely by trying to get an audition for "Into the Woods" by hounding director Rob Marshall. "I tried to talk my way into that movie," she revealed during a recent Tribeca Film Festival talk. "I did that thing you never do, where I'm like, 'May I please audition?' And it's like, 'They knew where you were, sweetheart. They'd have found you if they wanted you to audition.'" Don't be so hard on yourself, lady. At least when the next musical comes around, they'll know you might be up for it.

Local musician appears on The Food Network

Many in Philadelphia know Mariano Mattei as a musician, producer and co-owner of Philly Sound Studios. What they may not know is that Mariano is also a talented chef. That all changed last week, when the South Philly native appeared on the Food Network's "Cooks vs. Cons." There he competed alongside other amateur chefs as well as professionals, winning over audiences and judges alike with his homemade pasta skills. We got the chance to chat with Mattei about his life in music and food, as well as his plans to open up a pizzeria in Point Pleasant.

So how did you end up on "Cooks vs. Cons"?
A friend of my sister posted on her wall asking, "Doesn't your brother cook?" So I filled out the online application and they called me within the hour. The next day they set up a Skype interview followed by photo and video submissions. Next thing you know I'm invited to cook for the producers and be filmed. After that I got the on the show!

Very cool. Were you surprised by the final round? I know I was.
I think the best dish won! Everything on that show is a surprise because you simply never know. When that clock is ticking, the pressure is on!

You seem to thrive under pressure with all that you do. Locally you're well-known as a music guy.

Mariano Mattei prepares pan-seared salmon on "Cooks vs. Cons." FOOD NETWORK

When did you first start cooking?
I actually learned to cook very young from my Nonno and Nonna. Every Sunday was a feast with the entire family and they used to let me help out. I loved cooking from day one.

On "Cooks vs. Cons," you talk a lot about your grandmother. What's the greatest lesson she's ever taught you?
"Chi va piano, va lontano!" It's a catch phrase of hers that means "he who goes slow, goes far."

You mentioned opening a pizzeria. Tell us about it!
So my father and I have a place at Point Breeze and Wharton. We're looking to open a pizzeria there with an acoustic venue on the second floor. It's in the works.

For all the latest on Mariano visit Mariano mattei.com.

Be sure to tune into the Food Network tonight for the finale of "Cooks vs. Cons" at 9 p.m.

Johnny Knoxville's gotta love The King

In "Elvis & Nixon," Johnny Knoxville doesn't play The King but he gets close enough: The "Jackass" alum plays Sonny West, part of the "Memphis Mafia," as he joins Michael Shannon's Elvis on one of the odder stories of his career: the time he went to the White House for a meeting with Richard Nixon (Kevin Spacey). Even Knoxville can't believe it's real.

In "Elvis & Nixon," Johnny Knoxville does more than don bushy hair as Sonny West, member of Elvis Presley's (Michael Shannon) "Memphis Mafia." BROAD GREEN

I don't want to just assume you're a massive Elvis fan, since you probably are.
I'm from Tennessee. Elvis was obviously Elvis, but in Tennessee he was even bigger, if that's possible. My sisters were 8 and 10 years old, and they were huge Elvis fans. I just grew up that way.

Playing one of his posse is close enough to playing Elvis, I'd guess.
I'm almost sleeping with him. I've almost slept with him by doing this.

I like that Michael Shannon's not doing the usual Elvis impersonation.
It's an Elvis no one's ever seen before. Michael Shannon is one of if not the best actor of his generation. When he and Kevin Spacey would go at it, it was like watching Ali and Frazier, if Ali and Frazier were helping each other instead of hitting each other. It was tough to stay in character because I was so excited by what they were dong.

Making a film about this story is great, too, because Elvis seems so removed from the rest of the species that you can't tell how sincere he is about asking Nixon to become a federal agent.
He sincerely wanted a federal badge. [Laughs] It didn't give him the power he wanted, but most of his objectives were achieved. So is he crazy for thinking he could show up at the White House and get a meeting with the president? I don't know. He did it! His reality was so different from ours.

Celebrities aren't quite as out there as Elvis was then. They might be a little more grounded because there's more connectivity with fans through the Internet.
Well, I don't know. Some are pretty bananas. [Laughs] There's some f—ing nut jobs out there. It's different now. You can't walk into the president's office with a gift that's a gun anymore. Those days are behind us.

It must be fun to get to dress up in period garb.
Oh my god, I love that side of it. My house, I have a whole closet of the costumes we had from "Jackass" or whatever. I just keep them. I have the big chops [from "Elvis & Nixon"]. And I had pubes that grew past my belly button.

I wasn't expecting to talk about pubes first thing in the morning.
I went deep into character. I had a shag carpet of hair from my belly button down to under below and thigh-to-thigh.

WHERE TO EAT, DRINK & PLAY

Spring is all around the Philly food scene

From Morimoto to Brigantessa to Palladino's, chefs are celebrating the changing seasons.

CAROLINE RUSSOCK
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

While we might have to wait another few weeks for the city's farmers markets to start popping up around town, the city's chefs have already gotten their hands on hauls of fresh spring produce. Working with a new set of ingredients after a long winter is the kind of thing that gets chefs excited, especially after a dragging winter season. Here's a look at a trio of spring menus that take full advantage of the flavors of the season.

With fish flown in from Tokyo's Tsukiji Market and not exactly native ingredients like wasabi, sushi isn't the first cuisine that comes to mind when thinking about eating seasonally. Over at Morimoto, head chef Benjamin Dayag is embracing the concept of seasonality with a new tasting menu. The eight-course omakase embraces springtime, a season where even the fish are a little fattier (and tastier), and in-season produce with dishes like Wagyu beef with maitakes and veal jus.

Brigantessa chef Julia Robinson has chosen the changing seasons as the ideal time to overhaul the menu at this Passyunk Avenue wood-fired fare specialist. Two new additions are the unofficial surf and turf of spring: lobster crudo with fennel, basil and salmon roe and a Wagyu ribeye that's seared on a lava rock and served alongside charred spring onions and long hot peppers.

The menu at Palladino's on Passyunk reads like a farmers market shopping list with a grilled spring salad of favas and fava leaves, pea shoots, zucchini, fennel and little gem lettuces tossed in a lemon and mint vinaigrette but the real showstopper of the spring dishes is a sharable bistecca alla fiorentina i.e., a monster T-bone served over a bed of ciambotta napoletana, a melange of slow-braised vegetables kicked up with capers and basil.

6 Best amusement parks for 2016

The Wizarding World Of Harry Potter opened this month at Universal Studios Hollywood. GETTY IMAGES

Where the new thrills are.

Fodor's Travel

An incredible crop of roller coasters and thrilling attractions are set to debut this summer, reaffirming the ever-growing demand to push the boundaries of theme-park physics. With Harry Potter's expansion to Hollywood and the debut of the world's first wooden launch coaster, 2016 is sure to be an incredible year. ZACHARY LAIKS

Universal Studios Hollywood

Universal City, California
Main Attraction: The Wizarding World of Harry Potter

Boy wonder Harry Potter has triumphantly arrived in California this month by way of The Wizarding World of Harry Potter, a massive expansion of Universal Studios Hollywood that re-creates many of the elements of the original park in Orlando that opened in 2010. Anticipation is running high for the California outpost that transports guests to Hogsmeade village, the iconic Hogwarts castle and The Three Broomsticks for a pint of Butterbeer. As for the attractions, Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey, a favorite in Orlando, receives some fine enhancements in its new iteration, including 3-D video projections.

Lake Compounce

Bristol, Connecticut
Main Attraction: Phobia Phear Coaster

Joining the ranks of its top-rated wooden coaster Boulder Dash, the small and charming Lake Compounce is ready for a banner summer with its new triple launch Phobia Phear Coaster. The first of its kind in the Northeast, the hybrid coaster takes on a pretzel-like formation, rocketing riders in a pendulum at speeds that reach 65 mph before leveling out at 150 feet for a cobra roll inversion and intense vertical twist dive. It's an exciting year for the park, as it adds its second banner coaster, after Boulder Dash initially put the park on the map. The speedy coaster features an extended out-and-back track and is the first to be built into the side of a mountain, surprising riders with unexpected fast drops and turns that snake through the forest terrain.

Six Flags Great Adventure

Jackson, New Jersey
Main Attraction: The Joker

The tristate area's calling card for top thrills, Six Flags Great Adventure expands its impressive lineup of coasters this summer with a new 4-D Free Spin coaster, The Joker. Featuring high-tech magnetic engineering, the coaster's five vehicles allow riders the stomach-churning sensation of weightlessness as free-fly flips make every ride on the coaster unique. No stranger to intense G-forces, the park is home to the Kingda Ka, the world's tallest and second-fastest roller coaster, and El Toro, a wooden coaster featuring one of the steepest wooden drops in the world.

Cedar Point

Sandusky, Ohio
Main Attraction: Valravn

Safeguarding its title as the roller coaster capital of the world, Cedar Point welcomes its 17th, Valravn, this summer. Unique in design and in layout, Valravn features an ultrawide train with eight seats across three rows. With a terrifying 90-degree, 214-foot drop, the coaster is the world's tallest and fastest of its kind, reaching speeds up to 75 mph as it clips through three inversions. No visit to Cedar Point is complete without testing your mettle on Millennium Force, the park's signature giga coaster. The coaster extends 310 feet into the clouds before a drop that accelerates up to an insane 93 mph.

Knott's Berry Farm

Buena Park California
Main Attraction: GhostRider

A California classic, few parks honor tradition like Knott's Berry Farm, where classic chicken dinners and boysenberry pie remain perennial favorites. With an impressive collection of hair-raising coasters and thrill rides, the park improves on one of its standbys this summer, renovating its wooden coaster GhostRider. Refurbished and revamped to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the park's Ghost Town, the new iteration of the coaster will feature mine-car-themed Millennium Flyer trains as well as a new track.

Dollywood

Pigeon Forge, Tennessee
Main Attraction: Lightning Rod

Breaking barriers and world records, Dollywood continues to innovate with Lightning Rod, the world's first wooden launch coaster, which will also clock in as the world's fastest wooden coaster. Reaching new thresholds as limits are tested at 73 mph, the hot rod-themed coaster will feature a 73-degree, 200-foot drop, and 12 airtime hills. With Southern charm to spare, the Dolly Parton-centric park excels with its live entertainment, deep-fried delicacies and a wide array of family attractions.

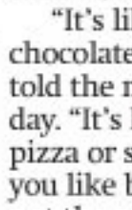
Eagles will take quarterback at No. 2

Howie Roseman is swinging for the fences, looking for the next franchise quarterback at No. 2. GETTY IMAGES

The Eagles sent a ransom to the Browns on Wednesday, but they think they have their man.



EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

Time for Eagles fans to party like it's 1999.

That's the last time Philly had a top 2 pick in the NFL draft, and after making a blockbuster trade with the Cleveland Browns Wednesday, they are now slated to pick second overall in next week's draft and take their next Donovan McNabb.

Who will they choose? Howie Roseman narrowed it down to two names. Carson Wentz or Jared Goff. Both quarterbacks. He wouldn't confirm which they wanted more, saying the Birds were comfortable with both candidates.

"It's like vanilla or chocolate," Roseman told the media Wednesday. "It's like pepperoni pizza or sausage. What do you like better? They are not the same guy. They are unique in so many ways and both have some really great traits."

There had been speculation about the trade for several days from several reliable sources, and when the dust settled it appeared quite a haul had been sent to Cleveland.

Philly will part with the following:

- Their first (No. 8 overall) in 2016
- One of their thirds (No. 77 overall) in 2016
- Their fourth (No. 100 overall) in 2016
- Their first in 2017
- Their second in 2018

Philly receives the following:

- Cleveland's first (No. 2 overall)
- Cleveland's fourth in 2017

"It's a tough pill to swallow, we understand," Roseman said of the steep price. "It's a good job by the Browns. Congratulations to them."

It seems peculiar, due to all the money they have committed — and guaranteed — to Sam Bradford and Chase Daniel short term that Philly wants to add a quarterback. But the team is looking long-term and thinks this is the year to make a move.

"These are young guys, and the National Football League is a big jump from any level," Roseman said of the two players, almost locks to go 1 and 2 overall. "That's one of the things we looked at, neither guy has to come in and play this year or even next year."

Both Wentz, from North Dakota State and Goff, from Cal, have impressed all offseason long and climbed up mock drafts. Roseman claims that he and Jeffrey Lurie discussed the trade and their draft intent with Bradford and that the Eagles presumptive starter "took it like a pro."

Their ability to take Wentz (who appears to be a slight favorite) will depend on what the Rams do — a team that also paid a high price to move to No. 1 (from Tennessee). Assumptions are that they will take Goff first.

"We are going to invest in quarterbacks," Roseman said in a press conference Wednesday. "When you go back and you study — we had time to do that — we asked what are the keys to winning and being championship caliber over a long time? And it's quarterbacks. For us, we have a unique situation where we have a head coach, our offensive coordinator and our quarterbacks coach who are very comfortable with quarterbacks.

"When we went and researched what the QB classes will look like going forward, its a daunting proposition."

It certainly appears that Roseman has a plan. The Eagles started the offseason with No. 13, but were able to swap selections with Miami when they traded Kiko Alonso and Byron Maxwell down south.

"Sometimes you have to put your money where your mouth is," Roseman said.

Graham breaks down Eagles 2016 schedule

When the NFL releases its schedule for the year, it's not just fans who are giddy. The players are too.

And pass-rusher Brandon Graham has looked long and hard at the Eagles 2016 slate of games.

"I took a hard look at it and I know what we got," Graham said in the Eagles' locker room Tuesday afternoon. "I am happy to play the Lions again, we get to go do something there."

The former Michigan Wolverine is always enthused to be in his hometown, especially after their 2015 Thanksgiving embarrassment there last season. They face Detroit in Week 5 (Oct. 9) in a 1 p.m. matchup.

His analysis continued: "We play Dallas the first division game, big game at their house. I am excited about that too."

He is also excited about their season opener, against a Browns team likely to be a cupcake in the opener on Sept. 11 at the Linc.

But what Graham is most looking forward to is the team's final four weeks. For the first time in ages, the Eagles will close the regular season with three of their last four games at home against division rivals.

They'll face the Redskins on Dec 11, (before traveling down 95 to Baltimore a week later) the Giants on a Thursday night game on Dec 22 and then the Cowboys on New Year's Day, all at home.

"That's lovely because it hypes everything up," Graham said. "From that point it's all about who has the best record, but in the end it's the division stuff. We really gotta beat people toward the end. It's good for us."

It is very likely that if the Birds can stay afloat for the first 13 weeks of the season, they'll be able to determine their own fate at home against each division foe in Weeks 14, 16 and 17.

There is one drawback to the Eagles' 2016 slate though — their too-early Week 4 bye.

"I usually like it in the middle," Graham said, "but it is what it is. Everybody goes through it and I think with us we will adjust and Coach will take care of it because he understands."

Aries Diplomacy will help you avoid a breakdown of communication. Put a positive twist on whatever you contribute. Romance will help you keep the peace with someone you love.

Taurus You have some good ideas. Discussing options with friends, peers or someone who needs help will put you in demand. Use charm in order to get the help you need.

Gemini Do whatever it takes to get fit. Personal projects geared toward perfecting your image will pay off, as long as you stay within your means.

Cancer A problem with a loved one will surface if you are preoccupied. A unique offer will help mend any broken promises or oversights. Keeping the peace is in your best interest.

Leo Do whatever it takes to lift your spirits and build your confidence. Participate in a challenge that tests your skills. Invest in your surroundings or visit a destination that excites you.

Virgo A window of opportunity must not be ignored. An intelligent offer will be your ticket to an unusual investment with plenty of potential. A promise will lead to a new beginning.

Libra Disagreements will end in a stalemate. Put your reputation first and avoid a situation that can make you look bad. Accept an inevitable change and make the most of it.

Scorpio Focus on your home and family, and make some unusual changes to the way you live. A good workstation or entertainment center will add harmony to your environment.

Sagittarius Changes you initiate at home will enhance an important relationship. Don't get involved in rumors or deal with institutions or government agencies. Expect delays.

Capricorn If you voice your opinion and share your ideas, you will be offered valuable information. Keep the peace when dealing with close friends, children or loved ones.

Aquarius Discuss your ideas and plans with a loved one. Reuniting with old co-workers will resurrect a plan or project from the past that still interests you.

Pisces Keep an open mind but don't be too trusting when dealing with peers, groups or clubs trying to change your beliefs, values or life direction. EUGENIA LAST
